The Constitution of the U.S. prohibits the government from infringing on our God given, natural human rights. The Declaration of Independence declares, "all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their creator with certain inalienable rights." In Article 1, section 10 this also includes the right to or not to enter into contracts. When we as free individuals voluntarily attach our signature to any instrument (document) of commerce with another person or corporate entity (businesses and governments), we come under the laws of commerce. The Uniform Commercial Code has been adopted by effect, the UCC supercedes the Constitution unless you do something to reserve or save your rights. In section 1-207 of the UCC, exists the ability to explicitly reserve all your rights (God given, natural, Constitutionally protected) without prejudicing (surrendering) those rights. If you don't reserve your rights, then you give them up and come under the laws of commerce, which doesn't protect God given, natural rights, unless you have explicitly saved those rights. Do YOU understand ALL those commercial laws and how they affect you? I don't! Since so many have died to protect my rights, why would I voluntarily give them up? I won't give them up and neither should you!
